Center for Justice and Peacebuilding

About Center for Justice & Peacebuilding (CJP):

Mission

The Center for Justice & Peacebuilding (CJP) equips and sustains individuals, institutions and communities to work for justice and peace through education, training, practice and research.

Vision

The CJP will develop leadership to create a just, peaceful and secure world. The CJP is comprised of the Graduate Program in Conflict Transformation, and the Practice and Training Institute which houses the Summer Peacebuilding Institute, Seminars for Trauma Awareness and Resilience and other intensive training, program, and partnership opportunities.

CJP was one of the first university graduate divisions to offer a Masters in the conflict and peacebuilding field. CJP also launched the first peacebuilding institute offering intensive professional development and graduate-level courses. Our Summer Peacebuilding Institute has become a model for other peacebuilding institutions around the world.

CJP is the recognized leader among academic peacebuilding institutions in integrating academic study and practice and houses the only Practice and Training Institute within a graduate peace and conflict studies program. Interactive classes refer to current issues and research and draw from extensive experience of instructors and students. As of the end of 2010, CJP has graduated 360 students from its graduate program.

CJP welcomes people from all cultural and religious traditions. Participants from over 50 countries bring diverse faith and cultural perspectives. CJP builds upon extensive Mennonite experience in domestic and international peacebuilding, relief, and development work and is rooted in the faith commitment of active peace and justice. The rigors of academic specialization at CJP are combined with practical preparation for a life of peacebuilding.
